Gone, but not forgotten

By Jamie Baker-Nantz, editor

Tears streamed down the tall, white-haired man's face. He dabbed at his eyes behind dark sunglasses and wrestled inwardly with finding his voice.

"I'm sorry," he said quietly, after a long pause.

Charles Lorentz's voice cracked when he found the words to express what being able to see the Vietnam Traveling Memorial Wall meant to him.

"I find it hard to put into words because I've got friends on that wall," he said.

Lorentz, of Independence, was one of more than 7,000 visitors who came to the Kentucky Veterans Cemetery North July 10 through July 15 to view the three-fifths scale replica of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C.

Despite the high winds, the torrential rain and extreme heat, people showed up throughout the day and night to pay tribute to the 58,178 soldiers including four from Grant County.

"I think it's absolutely fantastic," Lorentz said. "I've been to other traveling memorials and I've seen the one in Washington, but this is the first time I've seen this one."

The Vietnam War left a scar on Lorentz and others like him that time has done little to erase.

"I don't know how, only the good Lord knows, but I had orders to go to Vietnam but they were stopped," he said. "I ended up in Okinawa, but the other 24 soldiers from my unit went to Vietnam and they didn't come home."

Jack Ball of Dry Ridge, has never made it to Washington so he made sure to see the wall since it was this close to home.

"It's wonderful to finally see it," he said.

Ball, an Army veteran, said he barely missed serving in Vietnam. His brother-in-law's father was a casualty and he came to find his name.

Grant brothers serve country at the same time

By Bryan Marshall
Staff Writer

Ed and Ronnie Gabbert share a bond like few brothers.

The Grant County siblings both were drafted by the U.S. Army to serve in the Vietnam War a year apart, to the day.

They were even in the same unit.

"He got drafted a year before I did," Ed said. "He got drafted on Feb. 4, 1968. I got drafted Feb. 4, 1969. He was already in Vietnam when I got my orders. We hadn't seen each other for like 18 months."

When I got to Vietnam, I got sent to the same unit he was in. We were able to meet on a chopper pad in Vietnam after 18 months."

Ronnie recalls sitting in a bunker one night with about 10 other soldiers.

Another soldier mentioned to Ronnie that he had saw his brother a couple days earlier and he was going to be meeting up with the unit soon.

Ronnie said he thought there was no way the soldier was talking about Ed.

Adkins to lead MCE

By Jamie Baker-Nantz
Editor

Leanne Adkins can hardly contain her excitement for a new school year to begin.

"On a scale of one to 10, it's a 10-plus," she said.

When the 2013-2014 school year starts, Adkins will be the new principal at Mason-Corinth Elementary.

Adkins spent 13 years as an elementary teacher at Dry Ridge Elementary before she accepted the position of Advocate for Student Achievement in 2008 and worked out of the Grant County Board of Education central office.

"I still love what I do, but I always had in the back of my head that if the opportunity presented itself, I'd love to be a principal," Adkins said.

The last class that she actually taught will be juniors when school begins this fall and because she missed that daily interaction with students, she's gung-ho.

Adkins has two sons, Seth, a 16-year-old, and Luke, a 14-year-old, both students at GCHS. She said they, along with her husband, Craig, have been supportive.

Adkins is familiar with MCE because she worked there as a substitute teacher when she first moved to Grant County in 1994. In April - May 2008, she even filled in as acting principal at MCE.

She's met with some of the MCE staff, including the front office personnel, the counselors and the custodians.

Complaints prompt OEA investigation at GCHS

By Jamie Baker-Nantz
Editor

The Office of Educational Accountability has completed an investigation of complaints against Grant County High School Principal Claudette Herald and has recommended two procedural changes.

The OEA, which is under the Kentucky Department of Education, is responsible for investigating complaints.

"We will address the report, but there was nothing of high concern that's a problem," said Grant County Superintendent Ron Livingood.

After complaints were filed against Herald, OEA staff visited GCHS twice in September 2012 and interviewed staff, as well as collected documents relating to the allegations. The OEA filed its final investigation report on June 21, 2013.

COMPLAINTS

“I love my job and I’m committed to do what is best for our students,” Herald said. She has been principal at GCHS since 2008.

The report includes allegations, findings of fact by the OEA, conclusions and resolutions for the school district.

The allegations against Herald include:

- Allowing Darrell Guffey to leave from his teaching duties early and arrive late so that he could drive a school bus and receive pay for teaching and being a school bus driver.
- Requiring/permitting grades to be changed for a student to ensure that the student graduated when the student didn’t complete the coursework or earn the grade.
- Requiring at least one teacher, Jim Hicks, to repeatedly supervise the cafeteria not allowing him to have a duty-free lunch as required by KRS 158.060.
- Allowing a health credit to be awarded to students participating in JROTC and a physical education credit to be awarded to JROTC students without the course following the PE curriculum.
- Special education teachers at GCHS being required to teach regular education students, which is outside of their certification area.

The OEA found merit in two of the five allegations. Those pertained to teachers with outside employment and how GCHS JROTC students received their health credits.

According to the Grant County Staff Procedure Manual, all staff

“We’re going to continue to do what’s best for our kids. . . students are always first.

- Claudette Herald
GCHS principal

are required to be in their rooms or on assigned duty no later than 7:30 a.m. and they must remain on duty until 3:30 p.m.

The OEA established that Guffey drove a school bus at the same time he was teaching. He was not required to sign in or out, so the OEA couldn’t verify if he worked the hours required of all the other certified staff. Guffey is a full-time teacher and also serves as head girls’ basketball coach.

Grant County Superintendent Ron Livingood said other districts utilize teachers as bus drivers, so that practice is not unusual. A teacher at Grant County Middle School also drives a school bus.

The Grant County Board of Education Policy 3.1331 states, “Certified employees shall not accept outside employment or activities which will prevent them from fulfilling regularly assigned school duties and obligations. Employees shall not perform any duties related to an outside job during their regular working hours.”

The OEA concluded that Guffey’s position as a bus driver is considered outside employment because it “is a completely separate position through the Grant County School District and specific pay is received for additional hours of work each day.”

Livingood said that the issue will be addressed by revising each school’s handbook to allow exceptions for the start and end times for teachers at the discretion and approval of their supervisors.

“These two teachers who also work as bus drivers receive one check from the district,” Livingood said. “This issue can be rectified by changing the rules with more appropriate language in each school’s handbook.”

The OEA ruled that Herald was in violation of the Grant County Staff Procedures Handbook and GC Board of Education Policy 3.1331, as well as KRS 161.180, by allowing non-certified personnel to supervise his students when he leaves class prior to the end of the period to perform his second job as a school bus driver.

Herald must supply the OEA documentation to support Guffey’s compliance of the staff procedure manual by Aug. 30, 2013.

Herald said she will work with the district’s administration to address the issue.

“We want to make sure our teaching time and bus driver time is separate so that both job responsibilities can be met,” Herald said.

The other allegation, concerning health credits, was also found by the OEA to have merit.

Herald said that the issue had been brought to her attention well before the OEA investigation and had already been addressed.

According to the OEA report, Herald became aware at the end of the 2011-2012 school year that the KDE required health credit could not be achieved through the JROTC class. GCHS had allowed students enrolled in the JROTC program to use JROTC courses to satisfy both the PE and health credit requirements.

On June 8, 2012, Herald sent a letter to JROTC students and parents informing them of the issue. The letter stated, “KDE will only recognize the PE component of JROTC. This means you will need to consider how you wish to gain the health component prior to your graduation.”

The OEA concluded that GCHS JROTC program, would be required to follow the Kentucky Core Academic Standards for PE, which can be substituted for a half credit for PE. It cannot be substituted for the health requirement.

“Principal Herald violated the requirements of 704 KAR 3:305 by allowing students of GCHS to use courses in the JROTC program to meet the one-half credit health requirement for graduation,” the OEA report stated.

“Prior to the investigation, we already made changes so that students will receive their health credit through certified staff,” Herald said. “Their PE credit can be obtained through the JROTC program or in a traditional physical education class.”

Scott Mann, the parent of a 2013 graduate of GCHS, was concerned whether his son would be impacted when he goes off to school this fall because he did not receive his PE credit because he took JROTC as a freshman.

“I believe when we entrust our children to a school system, we should trust they are getting the education the state says they should,” Mann said.

Mann said he called the OEA and was told that his son wouldn’t be penalized for not having the half credit since he had already graduated.

The OEA found no merit in the other three allegations. The report either indicated that “Herald did not wrongly permit or require grades to be changed” or the OEA during its investigation was unable to “verify wrongdoing by Principal Herald because individual staff testimony was inconclusive and documentation was not available.”

The OEA report also concluded that “Herald did not violate statute or regulation by allowing teachers already employed at GCHS to act as a ‘substitute’ teacher on the occasions when no substitute teacher was available for the teacher of record.”

“We’re going to continue to do what’s best for our kids,” Herald said. “Classrooms today aren’t the same as they were when I was in school, so we are going to continue to look at a variety of ways to educate students, including non-traditional settings, which look different than people are used to, but students are always first.”

VIEWPOINT

OUR OPINION

Community comes together

One of the best things about Grant County, is that when there's work to be done and a cause to get behind, this community can really get things done.

Such was the case of the effort, sweat and planning that went into hosting the Vietnam Traveling Veterans Memorial Wall last week.

The event was sponsored by Grant County Tourism, the Williamstown Merchants Committee, the Kentucky Veterans Cemetery North and the City of Williamstown. There were also various other businesses, organizations and individuals that contributed to the wall coming to Grant County.

More than 7,000 people came out despite the torrential rain, high winds and excessive heat to get a glimpse of the names, which represent soldiers who lost their lives in the Vietnam War.

Hosting the wall was truly a community effort from those participating in the program to all the countless volunteers that willingly gave of their time to serve as grief counselors, or help with the set up or tear down and as volunteers passing out water or manning a locator booth and standing guard 24/7 while the wall was in Williamstown.

Grant County once again came together for a greater good and can be proud of its efforts.

Of special note are the efforts of Williamstown Mayor Rick Skinner to lead the charge to pay for the wall's visit and to Storme Vanover, president of the Williamstown Merchants Committee, for planting the seed to bring the wall here in the first place. You did good!

We've said it before and we'll say it again now - great things can happen here when the community comes together.

PERSONALLY SPEAKING

Goodbye to an old friend

One life lesson about having a job like mine is, you meet a lot of people, become good friends with most, and lose a lot to death as you both age.

Sometimes I feel that I should have written about each and every one as they passed on from this life. My history of writing columns shows I have only picked out a small portion; those who somehow, for myself, I have elevated to a special status.

So it is with the late Howard Chipman.

I never went to Howard's house nor do I know much personal information about him. I only knew Howard from his visits to the News office and in our many chance meetings at Bruce's Grocery and on the street.

I have been told that Howard has left quite a financial legacy though he lived and looked the part of a modest and frugal man.

Howard was frugal to the most extreme. Legend has it that he could squeeze a nickel until it turned into two dimes.

Most times that Howard would see me he had a compliment about something I or someone else had put in the newspaper.

"Now I've complimented you," he would say. "But now I have to complain a bit. I wish you would print those legal ads in a larger size. I have to use a magnifying glass to read them."

I would explain to him that the size was dictated by law and that if we ran them bigger then taxes would have to go up. This would then cause him to plead the case for letting them remain the same size and he would just keep using the magnifying glass.

Not too long ago a family member of his who had lived across the street from me died and there was an auction at his house. Howard was standing next to me when an old penny came up for auction. Several of us at the auction had obviously researched the penny. Depending upon a certain mark, if the penny had the mark it would be worth $1,200. Without the mark it was worth $80 to $120.

"How much do you think the penny will sell for Mr. Chipman?" I asked.

"It would be a 100 percent profit if it sold for two cents, wouldn't it?" he replied.

Howard nearly passed out when the first bid came in at $20 and I later placed an $80 bid. The coin shortly sold for about $90 to someone else.

Howard looked at me as if I was an insane person.

"I have some pennies in my pocket I'll sell you," he said.

Howard used to purchase soda pop, in bottles, at Pic Pac. The reason he choose bottles was that he could hand pick his own six-pack carton by pulling bottles from all the cartons and lining them up, choosing the six that had that, ever so slightly, a little bit more in them.

Howard loved our Christmas in July subscription special and customer appreciation day. Along with a money saving subscription offer, I would cook hotdogs and we gave out free chips and a drink to anyone that came by the office. The event always happened on the hottest day of the year.

Howard would always show up.

"Do you want a hotdog, Mr. Chipman?" I would ask.

"Well, I wouldn't refuse one," he would say.

He would sit under the old quince tree in front of our office as I cooked, slowly enjoying his hotdog, chips and drink. Before he left he would accept my offer for another hotdog or two and I would insist that he take a few home, along with a couple extra drinks and packages of chips.

He was always polite and grateful.

This column isn't so much an informational piece for you, but rather a closure on the loss of a friend for me.

I already miss seeing Howard approach, wearing his signature brown work pants and matching shirt and wide brimmed classic Kentucky hat; a smile on his old face and that 1860 style beard.

"I want to tell you something, Ken," he'd most often say upon approaching.

He never had a critical word without having something nice to balance it out.

GUEST COLUMN

Watching over the wall

The quiet darkness of a July night surrounded one of the seven Vietnam Traveling Walls at the Kentucky Veterans Cemetery North in Grant County. Arriving on July 9 and leaving July 15, one of the requirements to host the Wall is to have a 24/7 guard.

From midnight Friday to 8 a.m. Saturday, my husband, Bob and I were privileged to stand guard.

Periodically, we would walk the Wall silently gazing at all the names there. Osborne on the East Wall; Smith on the West Wall; the date when it was dedicated; marveling at the sheer number of men and women that perished during the Vietnam War from Nov.1, 1955 to May 15, 1975.

There is a humbling power in the Wall. You feel it when you walk there. But, you know it when you see a veteran walk to a certain point, place his hand on the Wall and collapse to his knees, head bowed in silence, shoulders shaking in quiet sobs.

lence, shoulders shaking in quiet sobs.

We were at the original Wall in Washington, DC the week before. Surprisingly, this Wall and the traveling Wall both have a similar ambience.

In the peaceful quiet just before dawn, the Wall stood silently. As the morning dawned and the birds began their chorus, the soft light slowly bathed the whole area in a warm, rosy glow.

Around 7 a.m., visitors began to filter in. Some folks from a local church who were in the adjacent meadow to pray for those whose names were on the wall; a gentleman who had seen the Wall before, but had come to see it again; a young man who's father was in Vietnam; more volunteers and finally, the folks taking over our watch.

As we sleepily turned toward home, we glanced back at the Wall, now completely bathed in morning sunshine, surrounded by birds singing their morning chorus. The power was still there, surrounding the Huey Helicopter and the "Through the Eyes" memorabilia and pictures exhibits.

It was a night to remember. We were tired, yes but it felt right, to maintain guard over the memorial of a war that marked our generation in history.

A WORD FROM OUR READERS...

Why do gas prices fluctuate so much?

I would like for someone to explain to me why on June 1 the gas prices in Grant County jumped from $3.69 a gallon to $3.89. No other stations in the area did this. For the next five days Walton stayed at $3.69, Verona was $3.79, Georgetown was $3.45, Warsaw was $3.55, and Markland Ind. was $3.56. Verona and Walton are the only ones that have gone up that high at this writing. Georgetown is $3.55, Warsaw and Markland are $3.75. Gas in Lexington was $3.45, I for one am tired of being ripped off by either the stations or distributor in Grant County. Until such time as the prices get lower here than other places I will fill my vehicles up before driving home. I will purchase as little gas here as possible here even if it is the same price as other places. If you feel the same as I do, maybe you can do the same. Maybe if their sales go down, so will their prices.

DOWN AND DIRTY

It's always something...

It seems only fair to share an update to the story since so many of you have been kind enough to lament my troubles with predation on the laying hens and the pastured broilers. If you missed the column from a few weeks back it basically chronicled some owl and fox attacks on our pastured poultry we raise for meat down in the nut grove and our egg-laying hens that range freely around the barn and house during the day.

We protect the layers in a secure barn at night but our luck ran out with daytime strikes as a fox picked off about eight in three days. The hens had to be on lock down in the barn for about a week; they still had a great view of open range but were not happy about their limited access. They were let out under supervision-which is really impossible with 70 hens.

I had mentioned that I let our Maremma livestock guardian dog out of his pasture where he patrolled for predators around the broilers and the sheep. I thought maybe he would help to deter fox during the day around the barn area but this was not a real solution because it basically confused Baxter. He had been trained (rather we reinforced his natural instincts) to stay on pasture with broilers and sheep. If you go off routine with Baxter it makes him manic for a few days.

So, as the owls continued to pluck a chicken a night we decided to net the whole area; this was cumbersome because we move them weekly through the nut grove. We managed to break the cycle and finally return to an unnetted version with no fatalities for 21 days- last night one got it. It was foggy so we are thinking that this may have worked to the advantage of the nearly silent owl that Baxter could not see. Andy will be buying some colorful pennants to string between branches because the netting is now over the blueberries. So in total we have lost seven broilers to owls. They go to the processor, so a cleared field for a month may help to “reset” the simpatico of the farm and encourage the owls to move on; or not?

Snakes, snails and puppy dog tails

Our troubles did not end with the winged and four-legged eaters; seems snakes like to eat baby birds and chicken eggs. Yep, of all things, one morning we look up at one of the barn swallow’s nest and there is a big rat snake wrapped around and in it (with a bulging mid-section). This was the ultimate insult to the farm because we are named after the barn swallows! We discussed the matter and decided that we needed to protect our investment and let us just say the snake is no longer in one piece. The brooder for baby chicks is also in the barn so it is critical to secure it from snakes, too.

Jeneen WICHE

So at the end of a couple of bad weeks, Andy and I sat down to try and figure what the long term solution to some of our problems may be and we finally decided on another Livestock Guardian Dog that would be trained with an emphasis on the barn and home where the layers roam. Of course my car broke down on the way to pick up a Great Pyrenees puppy but my neighbor Cindy Danehy came to my rescue and we came home with Finca. Finca means farm or estate in Spain so it seemed fitting for this dog that was used by the Basque people over thousands of years. I have never been around a more laid-back puppy in all my life. He was not afraid of the thunderstorm that hit overnight his first night here; never batted an eye at fireworks and has taken to his hens quite well. I have the advantage of our old dog Buck who is proving to be an excellent teacher. Buck never roams off property; does not chase chickens and will put Finca in his place when he doesn’t feel like playing. He has even helped me teach Finca to stay and sit as the pup mimics the old man. I vowed I did not want another mouth to feed and vet bill but this may be just the solution we need to secure our environment from predation threats to a reasonable end. I know it will never be 100 percent but we will keep on trying.

The annual event will be at 7 p.m. Saturday, Aug. 10 at the Grant County Park in Crittenden, rain or shine.

However, vendors from the community must reserve a table by 4 p.m. Monday, July 29.

“This event will be an opportunity for families to celebrate going back to school, watch a movie under the stars, enjoy free hot dogs and free giveaways,” Jill Thomas, Grant County Community Education director, and Tabatha Clemons, Grant County Parks and Recreation director, wrote in a letter to businesses and community members.

Vendors will be provided one eight-foot table and are required to pass out folders, paper, pencils, erasers, binders, tissues and other school supplies.

Vendors, who are responsible for bringing their own chairs, may also pass out marketing materials.

Those who cannot be a vendor, but would like to help can donate money to help purchase additional supplies for students.

Last year, more than 950 students in Grant County were served at this event.

Along with the school supply giveaway, the movie “The Croods” will be shown on a 24’x14’ inflatable screen.

To reserve a table, call Grant County Parks and Recreation at 859-428-4500 or e-mail parks@grantco.org.

To donate, make the check payable to Grant County Community Education and mail to Grant County Board of Education, Attn: Jill Thomas, 820 Arnie Risen Blvd., Williamstown, KY, 41097.

“I just want to get their input and ideas,” she said. “I’m curious to find out what suggestions they all have about the school. MCE has a good, caring staff and I’m excited to meet with next with the teachers so I can get their input.”

Adkins’ educational philosophy is straightforward and it is student focused.

“Our kids matter,” she said. “The things we do need to be geared toward helping the kids be their best, whether it’s social, academic or emotional they deserve the best.”

She believes that having been a substitute for Grant County schools in all of the schools, as well as working on a district level, will help her be a better principal.

“I feel privileged to have that insight from multiple buildings,” she said. “I can take things that work and avoid the ones that didn’t, but it’s going to be a team effort. I want to work with the staff to make changes where we need to.”

Part of her focus will be working to improve test scores at MCE.

“Strong test scores are a byproduct of a strong institution and they are hugely important, but they are not all that we do,” she said.

She’ll earn a salary of $82,985.17 as MCE’s principal.

She officially began her new duties July 1 and had already been in the building and walked the halls just to get a feel for the place she is now responsible for.

“Each school has a different feel and there’s a strong sense of ownership at MCE,” she said. “I believe it’s a privilege to be in education. Our kids are special and I want our building to reflect that.”

Adkins is not afraid of hard work. She could be found working after others had gone home as she poured over the district’s test scores as part of her duties as the district’s advocate for student achievement.

When she’s not working, she is a member of Concord Baptist Church. She also likes to read and spends time watching her sons play basketball, baseball and golf.

She knows there will be challenges ahead as education continues to change, such as statewide changes that will be made next year in the social studies standards, but she’s ready to get to work.

“There’s a big shift and we’ve got to figure out how do we deliver these changes and then how will we measure it,” she said. “My biggest challenge will be to make sure that decisions are based on the student’s needs and all our efforts are centered on what is best for our children.”

She also sees each year as a fresh start.

“It’s a clean slate and I’m just excited because I consider this a privilege and a blessing,” she said.

FAITH & VALUES

RELIGIOUS VIEWS

Beauty isn't everything

We human beings are incredibly quick to assume the worst. As teenagers, we throw tantrums and slam our bedroom doors when our parents ground us, forgetting that they only want the best for us. Having spent most of my college years involved in youth ministry, I have heard both teenage boys and teenage girls pull the “my parents hate me and don’t get me” card. But I have also witnessed many parents tearfully lament after hearing their child say, “I hate you” for the first time. Usually, these words are uttered after a petty argument or misunderstanding. Both parties end up mis-communicating with each other and apologizing when they have had time to cool down because only then can they see that they’ve both made the mistake of blowing things out of proportion.

All of us are guilty of blowing things out of proportion, especially when it comes to how we see ourselves. Marketing and advertising groups, the media, the entertainment industry, our families, our peers, and even we ourselves can hold us to unachievable standards of beauty. Sometimes these standards, like having the perfect hair, the perfect shave, or the clearest skin, can become personal goals. We begin striving for the perfect look and forget that God created us in God’s own image. We are all caught up in a system of transgressions. We transgress against ourselves believing we are not enough and we transgress against others by holding them to the same unachievable standards. We buy the makeup, we get name brand clothes, we splurge for the expensive cologne and we forget to take care of our spirit.

Before we judge ourselves too harshly, let us remember the words of Psalm 139, which says clearly and without exceptions that we are wonderfully made by God’s own hands. We cannot give up on ourselves and we cannot waste our potential on reaching for an artificial perfection. If we make it our personal goal to see the best in others as well as in ourselves, then God will never give up on us. So whenever we have the opportunity to show someone that they are beautiful just as they are, let us take it. Whenever we have the opportunity to learn from our parents and our children, let us take it. Whenever we have the opportunity to feed a hungry spirit, let us take it because we are wonderfully made in God’s own image.

GONE

When he located it, Ball ran his fingers gently over the name and then took a photograph of it.

For others it was a chance to share an experience with their families.

Norm Whitney of Dry Ridge, brought his three grandchildren to the exhibit.

"I believe it's very important for them to see a little bit of the price of war," Whitney said.

Jared Whitney expressed sadness at seeing all the names engraved on the black panels.

"All these people fought for our freedom," he said.

"I think it's crazy that so many people would give up their lives for our freedom. It's cool, but it's really sad," said Emily Whitney.

For others scarred by the Vietnam War, it was another opportunity for healing.

John Osborne of Williamstown, had mixed emotions about the wall coming.

"I've never seen the original, so this was the first time I was around it and I actually spent time looking up a couple of names," said the Vietnam veteran, known for his military drawings and paintings.

Osborne said he started painting so he wouldn't have to sleep because of his dreams of his time in Vietnam. The more he painted the better he got.

"I know it meant a lot in different ways to different people," he said.

Osborne, who volunteered at the wall, met another Vietnam veteran from Cincinnati who drove down to see the wall.

"He told me his name was on the wall by mistake, but it couldn't be taken off," Osborne said. "He wasn't sure how he would do finally seeing a memorial."

The man, with the help of an on-site grief counselor, made his way to the wall.

"You see guys who wouldn't break for anything who are deeply impacted by this," Osborne said.

"I dreaded a lot of it at first, but I'm absolutely glad I was a part of it. You owe it to the community to do that and I've finally reached a point where I don't mind talking about some of it," he said.

Making sure that the Vietnam War and veterans are never forgotten has become the life work of John Hosier, who takes his photography exhibit, "Through The Eyes" to schools and community events.

Hosier spent Wednesday, July 10 setting up more than 400 photos and artifacts, in his display, while Williamstown city employees and volunteers assembled the wall, but a severe storm blew threw the county dumping rain and knocking over tents, causing the opening ceremony for the wall to be moved to Thursday, July 11.

"We started with six tents and ended up with three, but it didn't matter because you came, young and old, you came together to assemble those panels," Mosier said during the closing ceremony for the wall on July 15.

Mosier, a Vietnam veteran, said on the day he was wounded, six of his friends were killed. He said his exhibit has traveled to more than 300 towns and he plans to continue to take it across the country so that those who sacrificed in Vietnam won't be forgotten.

"Everywhere I go, I'm going to think about you, here in Williamstown and Grant County, because you've touched my heart," he said.

The sincerity in Mosier's voice and his choice of words got to Osborne.

"I didn't feel a great deal of emotion until I heard him speak at the end and that's when it really hit me. I think it worked on everyone," Osborne said.

Mosier's moving, impassioned words, as well as the presence of the 300-foot wall, left an impact.

Grown men, some who had never met, hugged and shook hands because they shared a bond having served in Vietnam.

Even men who had known each other for years, embraced, after Mosier's closing comments.

"Brothers, forever," Terry Conrad, Grant County's building inspector and a Vietnam Veteran, called out to Osborne.

For Osborne, the emotion came when he drove back by the Kentucky Veterans Cemetery North as the wall was being disassembled.

"That's when it got me," he said.

HONORING our HEROES

There were a total of six men from Grant County whose names appear on the Vietnam Traveling Memorial Wall. Volunteers were able to locate five of those names and made a shading of those they found. Donald King's name was not located.

BROTHERS

Later, Ronnie's commanding officer told him to get on a helicopter. Little did he know who would be waiting for him when they landed. "When I got off, (Ed) was sitting there waiting for me," Ronnie said. "It was a surprise. I thought, 'What in the world's going to happen now?' I had been there for awhile and was kind of flashing back to all the stuff he was going to have to go through and I had seen. I was hoping it would be better, but I don't think it changed much, as far as conditions. It was surprise. It was happiness. It was sadness and as many emotions as you can have." The brothers stayed together for about 12 days, out of harm's way as much as possible before Ronnie, who had been in Vietnam for about eight months, learned he would be heading home. "I don't know if the paperwork got messed up or what, but usually back then they wouldn't send two brothers into the combat zone together," Ed said. Ed, who is two years younger than his brother, served for about seven more months before returning home. More than four decades later, the Gabbert brother remember a lot about their time fighting in Vietnam. "There was days when things weren't too bad and it wasn't too threatening," Ronnie said. "Then, there were other times when you'd get into an ambush. The worst thing I experienced as far as being fearful was when I was a squad leader. We'd take turns going out on a patrol after dark. You'd set up your ambush on a trail or something where there was expected to be some traveling. You only had eight or 10 guys with you. That used to unnerve me about as much as anything I'd ever done." While Ed said he does not talk about his time in Vietnam often, he thinks about it. "It was a big part of my life," he said. "I turned 21 in Vietnam. I was a young scrapper, I guess you could say. It makes you grow up in a hurry. I was glad to serve and I served to the best of my ability. If I had to do it again, I'd sign up tomorrow." While he served, Ed said he just hoped he made a positive difference. "I had a tender place for the children," he said. "I hated to see them mistreated." He met some good buddies who he tried to take care of, just like they took care of him. Upon returning home, not every veteran was treated well by those who did not support the war in Vietnam, something Ed said he and his brother experienced. "We wasn't respected like I thought we'd get," Ed said. "It was kind of a pretty big adjustment period. We weren't looking for any parade or anything like that. We were just glad to be home and wanted to be treated as such." Both Ronnie and Ed have made trips to Washington D.C. to see the Vietnam Memorial Wall. When they learned the traveling memorial would be displayed in Williamstown, they decided to volunteer as guards. "It was emotional both in Washington and here as well," Ronnie said. "Just to look at so many names, some that I probably saw while I was over there, and see how it turned out for them, it made you realize how fortunate you were and how the Lord looked over you. It really makes you be thankful." The brothers located the names of a few people they served with on the wall. Ed, who enjoyed talking with veterans while volunteering at the wall, said the memorial was "incredible." "They've done an excellent job," he said. "The wall is set up nice. I'm hoping a lot of people come and look at it and give the honor and respect that these men and women should receive." For Ronnie, it is overwhelming seeing the amount of names on the wall. "When we get together, the ones who made it, and stand there and look at the names, we share our situations that we went through," he said, pausing as he holds back tears. "But, this memorial is not about us. It's about them guys who didn't make it. That's what the whole thing's about."
